The following are some of the instructions given to Chinese Communist "volunteers" before crossing the Yalu River into Korea:

- a. Gradually sap the strength of the enemy and destroy him bit by bit.
- b. Prolong the war. Tire and weaken the enemy and avoid a quick, decisive engagement.
- c. Employ mobile warfare tactics initially, because the enemy is superior in equipment and in air and sea power.
- d. In guerrilla operations use Korean troops behind the enemy lines and reinforce them with Chinese Communist troops when necessary.
- e. Take the initiative in each battle, penetrate the enemy lines, encircle enemy units, and fight fiercely. After the battle, withdraw, disperse, and save strength for a fresh attack.
- f. Do not hold disadvantageous defense positions, but disperse over strategic areas and allow the enemy to pass through.
- g. Remember the lessons learned in China. Support the Koreans by helping the Korean Army, mobilizing the Korean people politically, and promoting solidarity between the Chinese and the Koreans.
